"Add 3 INCHES of steel-like Muscles to Your ARMS

4 Power-packed inches to your chest...FAST"

... IN JUST 30 DAYS!

LET ME SLAP 5 TO 30 POUNDS OF DYNAMIC, VIRILE MUSCLES ON YOUR BODY

... turn you into a rugged HE-MAN ...

load your body with jet-charged power, thick Herculean arms ... deep massive chest ... atomic-powered legs ... shoulders a "yard-wide" ... with power oozing from every pore of your new power-packed body ... FAST ... and right in the the privacy of your own home!

ALL I NEED is 15 MINUTES to prove that you can have that rugged, virile, he-man body, loaded with action, will-power and the dynamic personality you've always wanted.

In half the time with twice the ease, in the privacy of your own room, in just a few minutes daily I will ... through my TRIPLE-PROGRESSION COURSE ... slap inches of steel-like muscles on your spiest arms ... pack your chest with power and sin ... give you lifeguard shoulders ... dynamic, speedy, athletic legs ... add jet-charged strength in every muscle of your body. I don't care if you're short or tall ... skinny or fat ... office-worker, laborer, student or business man. I MUST make a new virile he-man out of you and help you build tremendous "inner strength" that will give you that virile look that men envy and women admire. What I did for BOB BURKE, ANDRE LEFINE and other Mr. America and Mr. Universe winners and thousands of former weaklings, I can do for you! Yes, I can turn you into a real HE-MAN!

HERE'S LIVING PROOF!

Andre Lefine gains 80 pounds!

AFTER

BEFORE making the coupon ... 180 pounds of skin and bones! What a turnaround would! He had 10-inch pipestem arms ... a 34 1/2-inch chest. Truly a pathetic case of weakness before he mailed me this coupon! AFTER Weider Training What a Build! 180 pounds ... a mountain of mighty muscles with Herculean 17-inch arms ... magnificent 48-inch chest and shoulders a yard wide. Another dream come true!

Let ME prove to you at my own expense that everything I say can be done!

ANYTHING FOR A LAUGH

The owner of a motel that had a racy reputation decided on a new policy and told the old man who acted as the clerk to insist that every young couple that registered have a marriage license. Late that night, the motel owner was driving by and stopped to check on how things were going. He learned that a man and woman had registered, but when he looked at the license they had given the clerk, he yelled, "Why, this is only a hunting license!" The old man ran out to the cabin the couple was in, hammered on the door, and called in, "If you ain't done anything yet, don't do it. This ain't the license for it."

An old lady walked into a local drugstore and asked the proprietor for some talcum powder.

"Yes, ma'am," said the druggist. "Just walk this way."

"If I could walk that way," the woman replied, "I wouldn't need the damn talcum powder."

Our secretary was talking with her girl friend about the events of the past week end and asked, "How did you find the men at the party?" The girl friend replied, "I just opened the door marked 'men' and there they were!"

"I have two down in front," said the well-stacked movie usherette as her shoulder strap broke.

Two pals were sitting in a bar getting happily loaded late one night. "Frank," asked one of the luses, "After you drink a lot of Scotch, does your tongue burn?" "I really don't know, Ray," the second souse replied. "I have never been drunk enough to light it."

Baron Von Oscht's FOREST OF NAKED THRILLS

By JOSEPH ESTERHEIT

Editor's Note: Now an American citizen, Joseph Esterheit came to the United States as a teen-age boy in 1947. After finishing college, he joined the police department of a large Eastern city, and later became a private detective. His excellent knowledge of Germany and the German language has often sent him back to his homeland on behalf of clients.

THE FIRST THING I saw when I was able to focus my eyes was the smirking face of Baron Heinrich von Oscht. A fashionable smoking jacket was draped over his slim shoulders and he was smoking a pungent Egyptian cigarette from a long, ivory and gold holder.

Some one had slapped me. The back of my head was throbbing as if a giant gong was being struck inside my skull. I was lying on a brocaded couch. I tried to sit up, but heavy hands pushed me down, again.

"That is all right, Karl," the Baron said, his eyes glinting behind his thick-lensed glasses. "Let the man sit."

I tried desperately to unscramble my thoughts. This must be the main hall of the Baron's castle. In the Teutonic surroundings, the furnishings had an over-luxurious look.

"It is impressive, hein?" the Baron said, strutting. "I believe in keeping my estate in the same manner that my ancestors did in the time of the Kaisers."

I didn't answer. To me, the whole place looked like a set from a bad Hollywood movie.

"You are a very lucky man," von Oscht went on. "Karl and Wilhelm would have killed you if it were not for my intervention. We do not like snoopers on the castle grounds."

I didn't doubt him for a minute. Those two looked like they killed for the sheer fun of it.

Karl was a massive giant of a man who weighed at least 300 pounds. He was completely bald and had the beefy and sadistic look of certain professional wrestlers.

You'd swear it couldn't happen in this day and age, but I saw the hidden forest where hunted girls can like beasts to hide themselves and their nakedness in the snow.

The other man had a lean face with an old scar running down one side of it. He was thinner and more wiry than Karl, but he seemed like a man who could be even more dangerous.

"Yes, a very lucky man," the Baron repeated, as he watched me ease up his two servants. "Now, you will repay my favor by telling me exactly what you were doing outside."

I THOUGHT FART Von Ocht was going to drag some kind of answer out of me one way or the other, so I decided to try the cover story that I'd already prepared.

"I'm a tourist," I said. "I spent some time in Munich—you can check up on my hotel, there—and I decided to take a tour through the surrounding countryside. I heard your estate was a famous landmark, so I decided to see it for myself. I'm sorry I was trespassing, but that's all there was to it."

"Karl! Wilhelm!" The Baron snapped the words out like two whiplashes. The bigger man lifted me up from where I was sitting as though I were a baby. He pinned my arms behind me and got a full nelson on my neck so that I was powerless.

"Your story does not have the ring of truth to it," the Baron said, scornfully. "It is not wise to lie to me."

He moved away and Wilhelm stepped in front of me. The wry man slugged me, not in anger but carefully and deliberately. Each punch was calculated so that it would hurt as much as possible, but not take me out or damage me so much that I'd be unable to speak.

When I saw that he was going for the body, I tried to make my belly muscles rigid. But a jab to the bread-basket knocked the wind out of me and softened me up for the rest. His fists landed against my kidneys and my stomach. A couple landed below the belt line—just high enough so that they would ruin me. Wilhelm grinned. He wanted me to know what he was doing, and what he could do.

The scar faced man stopped slugging at a signal from von Ocht. The big man let me go so that I doubled over and fell in a heap, holding myself in the middle.

The Baron stared down coldly as I fought waves of nausea and agony. "All right," he said, at last. "You are well enough to get up now. Will you tell the truth? Or shall I let my men really enjoy themselves?"

"I'll talk," I said.

It didn't really matter, anyway. It was merely a problem of my pride. And pride is a stupid thing to get taken out of action for. What I had to do now was to play along with this maniac and wait for my chance to escape.

So, I told him everything. Or almost everything.

I ALL STARTED two weeks before in my office in New York City. It began with a man named Sidney Michaels who hired me to find his daughter.

Louise Michaels was spending the summer taking one of those group tours of Europe. One day, after they had reached Munich, Louise decided that she would take a walk around the city to see some of the sights for herself. No one in the group ever saw her again.

"When did this happen?" I asked.

"The day before yesterday I've been in touch with the Munich police by telephone. They've been very cooperative, but they don't seem to be having any luck. You were recommended to me by a friend in New York."

I nodded and studied the photographs that Michaels brought with him. She was a good looking blonde with a clean, fresh face. A picture of her in a bathing suit showed her to be curved in all the right places.

"How old is she?" I asked.

"Twenty-one."

"This may be painful to you, but she is of age. . . . What makes you believe that she hasn't run off with a man?"

"I know my daughter," he answered quietly.

I must have looked doubtful because he flushed. "Louise is a remarkable girl, Mr. Esterheit. But if she ever did do anything like you suggest, I'm certain she would have sent me a note. She would never merely drop out of sight of her own free will."

I could have told him that stranger things had been known to happen. But something in his face stopped me. I assured him I would take the case, and the next morning I was on a jet to Germany.

WHEN I REACHED MUNICH, I made a reservation at the hotel in which Louise had been staying. Then I began to nose around.

Munich is one of the most beautiful cities in Germany. If you are inclined that way, you could spend the rest of your life there studying old buildings and monuments.

But if Munich is beautiful, it has its sinful side, too. There are sections in that town where every vice known to man exists. They have nude shows and exhibitions that will match anything in Hamburg's better known Reeperbahn. Prostitutes of every variety are available for anyone who has the dough.

My first thought was that Louise had been kidnapped by a prostitution ring. It was a thought that made my blood begin to foam. But I had to check it out.

During some earlier trips to that city I had done some favors for an old night club owner who was known as "Papa" Fritz. If Louise was in the hands of white slavers, Papa Fritz would be the one to know.

But he had heard nothing. Nothing at all. In fact, he was sure the girl was not in the city.

I cursed in frustration. No one had any idea about her. Not the people at the hotel, nor the police. I could not get a single lead. As far as I could tell, she had vanished into thin air.

But then Papa Fritz had a thought. He couldn't prove anything, of course. It was just a feeling he had. But girls had vanished like this before from the Munich area and there was one name that seemed to always crop up in connection with the disappearance.

"Who's that?"

"Ever hear of the Baron von Ocht?" he asked.

I shook my head. I hadn't.

"He is an odd man," Papa Fritz said slowly. "Some people say that he is out of his head. He has curious, sadistic tastes in sex. The Munich procurers, in fact, refuse to deal with him. There has been a rumor for a year or so now that he has taken to kidnapping girls so that he can indulge himself according to his own whims."

"What about the police?" I asked.

Papa Fritz shrugged. "There has never been any proof. And the Baron is a wealthy man. He believes himself entitled to live free from restraint, the way his ancestors did in the days of the Empire. He stays at his castle in the Bavarian countryside about 45 miles from here."

I KNEW THAT PAPA FRITZ had told me all he could—or at least all he was going to. The next morning I started out for Donnerheim, von Oacht's ancestral home.

I decided not to enter by the front door. If the girl was a prisoner, it did not make any sense to put the Baron on his guard. And, even if he were not involved, there was no harm in looking around a bit first.

I crawled carefully through an electrified, barbed wire fence and found myself in wild country that might have been a stage setting for a Wagner opera. It took me almost an hour to reach the gothic castle which dominated the estate from a high bluff. Near it, was a low building which looked like it might be used for a gamekeeper's cottage. I don't know why, but something told me to investigate the low building first.

I crept up to it and raised my head so that I could look through the windows. Then my jaw dropped and I stiffened in my tracks at what I saw.

Inside, huddled in the corner of a large room, were eight girls. Each one was absolutely naked. I recognized Louise, immediately. Next to her was a busty red-head and on the other side was a slim brunette. The girls were dazzling—each more beautiful than the other. But they were also trembling with fear.

When I could tear my eyes from them, I saw why. The Baron was standing at the other end of the room, talking to them. By his side was Wilhelm, a Luger pistol strapped to his side.

I put my ear to the glass, so that I could hear what von Oacht was saying.

"AND SO MY DEARS, we will enjoy another little hunt, hein? The one I find and shoot with my rifle will become my toy. The others... well, they can come back here where they will be well taken care of until the next hunt." He giggled. "Now, I will turn you loose. You will have one hour in which to hide yourselves."

He opened the door and stepped aside. The girls approached slowly, as if they were wondering what fiendish new game he were planning. Then, suddenly, they broke past the two men, running out into the countryside.

And that was all I saw. For in the next instant, blackness crashed down upon the back of my skull.

I told the Baron everything that happened, except about Papa Fritz. I had no doubt that he had connections who could kill the old man. And I wanted at least one person alive who knew where I'd gone that day.

The Baron gave me that high pitched laugh, again. "So, you are curious about the methods of the Baron von Oacht. Well, as long as you are here you might as well see everything, hein? You will be my guest on the hunt."

I just stared at him. The man was crazy, there was no doubt about that. "How can you have fun and games with these girls if you kill them," I asked gently, as if to a stupid kid.

"Kill them? Oh, you mean with my rifle. I merely shoot harmless pellets that contain an anesthetic—just enough to render a woman unconscious for a short while. Then I bring them back here and have my little fun with the loser."

He glanced at his expensive wrist watch. "It is getting late. I must change now. I will be back in a few moments."

WHEN THE BARON RE-ENTERED the room five minutes later, he was dressed in a Bavarian hunting costume including boots and a weird looking green hat. In his arms, he was holding an expensive hunting rifle.

The two servants and myself followed von Oacht out of the castle. I felt like I was in the middle of some strange nightmare, and I caught myself pinching my arm in order to wake up. But it was no dream. I was in the hands of a madman and his two servants for whom his every word was law.

The Baron followed the tracks of the girls' bare feet, bragging about his prowess as a trailer. "I should have been a scout for the American cavalry when it was pursuing the Indians," he boasted.

I didn't bother pointing out that, unlike the girls, the Indians were capable of shooting back.

Finally, he had several of them cornered. He laughed and called out to them where they were cowering behind rocks and trees. There was a flash of white skin and von Oacht brought his rifle up quickly.

Almost without knowing it, I found myself breaking away from Wilhelm and hurling myself at the Baron. The rifle went off—but his aim was spoiled and the shot missed.

Karl grabbed me from behind and clamped my arms behind my back. Cold fury burned in the Baron's eyes. "Take him back further," he told the big man. "But let him watch."

The Baron's rifle came up again. "Which one is it to be?" he asked tauntingly.

FOR A FEW MOMENTS there was silence. From where I stood now, I could see that one girl was behind a tree and that Louise and a brunette shared the shelter of a rock. Then the brunette swore and shoved with both hands against the blonde's buttocks. Louise stumbled into the open, the rifle cracked and she dropped to the ground.

The brunette ran off, crying. "I'm sorry," she wailed. "But I couldn't let him take me! I just couldn't."

The Baron slung the unconscious blonde over his shoulder like a trophy, and we all marched back to the castle.

"What now?" I asked.

"You will see." He bowed at me.

GLORIA DUANE

Sooner or later, Man's Action had to catch up with Gloria or vice versa, because action is the name of the game as far as this dame is concerned. Naturally, she's a dancer and, young as she is, she has appeared in night club chorus lines and classical ballet ensembles. But whether doing a torrid tap dance or graceful pirovette, Gloria is gloriously alive from her swirling pony tail to the tips of her toes.

By the law of averages, there must be many girls with 37-25-37 measurements — but it's how the measurements move that counts. Gloria moves with the artful grace of a ballerina, but even in the rare moments when she's sitting still, her eyes and her smile can dance their way into your heart.

IS YOUR WIFE A CHEAT? HERE'S WHY SHE MAY BE!

ARE AMERICAN WIVES PUSHOVERS? The startling answer is in this sizzling report prepared by one of America's leading experts on sexual behavior.

By W. D. SPRAGUE, Ph.D.

Editor's Note: Dr. W. D. Sprague is one of the nation's leading authorities in the field of human sexual behavior research. He has written countless magazine articles and more than a dozen books, including "The Sex Behavior of the American Housewife," which was published by Midwood-Tower Books, New York City, in 1961.

HOW MANY MARRIED WOMEN are there in the circle of your acquaintance?

Doubtless, the total is a sizeable one.

First of all, there are the wives of your friends.

Then, there are the married women who work in your plant or office and the housewives you see daily in your neighborhood.

If you work in a retail store or any business that caters to the general public, there are also the married women among your customers.

Altogether, you are probably acquainted—with several dozen married women of varying ages and from various different walks of life.

Now, just for the sake of argument, make a random tally of ANY TEN of these married women between the ages of 20 and 35.

Have you made your selection?

If so, form a mental picture of them lined up in a single rank, ready to be counted off. Possibly, they will be girls you know by their first names—Helen, Janet, Betty, Margaret and so on. It is equally possible that some—or even all—will be housewives whom you know only as "Mrs. Jones" or "Mrs. Smith," or whatever their last names might be.

In any event, count them again—just to make sure.

There are ten—right?

Good.

And now, if you want to make a safe bet with yourself, you can wager almost any odds that, of those ten married women between the ages of 20 and 35

THREE will have been unfaithful to their husbands within 24 months after their marriage. . . .

FOUR MORE will have been unfaithful to their husbands within five years after their marriage. . . .

Of the remaining THREE women in the group you picked at random, at least ONE will become involved in an extramarital affair within seven years after marriage.

In short, ONLY TWO out of the original TEN wives will remain faithful to their husbands for more than seven years after marriage!

THESE APPEAR TO BE the inescapable statistical conclusions reached as the result of an intensive recent study of the extramarital sexual behavior of American wives.

During 1963, the Psychoanalytical Assistance Foundation, a non-profit organization engaged in sex-behavior research, conducted a sweeping "in-depth" survey of 8,457 American married women.

The respondents interviewed during the course of the survey ranged in age from 17 to over 60. They came from all major geographical areas and from practically all social and economic levels of our society.

Countless startling facts emerged from this survey. Not the least among these was the high in-

A girl is sometimes taught that any form of sexual activity is a terrible sin. Her mind and emotions become conditioned to the idea that sex can ONLY be enjoyed under what she believes are "sinful" circumstances.

Girls who go steady and marry early may later discover the pleasures of flirting after they have become wives and mothers.

evidence rate of marital infidelity among married women between the ages of 20 and 35—the age bracket of more than 77 percent of the respondents.

Of all wives in the 20 to 35 age group, 31.4 percent admitted having had at least one extramarital affair during the first two years of their married lives.

Another 38.7 percent stated that they had been unfaithful to their husbands at least once between the third and fifth years of marriage.

An additional 9.2 percent declared that they had engaged in extramarital affairs at least once during the sixth and seventh years of marriage.

Only 20.7 percent stated that they'd had NO extramarital affairs during seven or more years of marriage.

A HIGHLY surprising aspect of the respondents' accounts of their infidelities was their almost casual and offhand admission of the ease—and even the eagerness—with which they drifted into sexual affairs with men other than their husbands.

"I've discussed the subject with many other married women in my circle of friends," said one intelligent, well-educated respondent. "Speaking confidentially among ourselves, most of us agree that we're pushovers."

"I was unfaithful to my husband for the first time about eight months after we were married," is the way another typical respondent expressed it. "When the opportunity to have an affair presented itself, I jumped at the chance—and I know plenty of other married women who have done the same thing."

HOLLYWOOD'S

DANGEROUS TEEN TEMPTRESSSES

By DON LANSING

Teen-age Christine Kaufmann is an adorable example of tomboy cateness combined with big-girl charms.

Editor's Note: Don Lansing is a former newspaper reporter who went to Hollywood to become a screen writer. However, he became so intrigued with the Hollywood scene that he returned to newspaper work to write about Hollywood itself. His work reflects not only an insider's knowledge but a psychological insight not found in routine gossip or publicity.

THE LITTLE GIRL stretched to her feet, every lush curve of her budding woman's body straining against the scanty bikini she was wearing, and wrangled provocatively out of view.

Later a man gave the little girl candy and promised her more if she would go with him.

The man took the little girl to a motel room and got his candy's worth.

The little girl met another man who gave her more candy.

She left the first man and went off with the second. Time passed and the first man looked and looked for the little girl until finally he found her.

She was pregnant.

The moral of the story is that little girls shouldn't take candy from strange men because when they do they invariably end up with the dirty end of the lollipop stick.

It's a moral that fell with an anti-climactic thud at the end of the otherwise adult, even spicy, film version of "Lolita." And it's a moral that's as outdated as the idea of "Little Miss Innocence" herself. The truth is that it isn't little girls who need protection against the predatory adult male; it's the over-21 shookeys who should be guarded against the nubile menace of that most deadly of all females: the sex kitten!

IN FAIRNESS TO "LOLITA," the movie intimated as much despite the time-honored moral of the ending. The book spelled it out even more frankly. But not as frankly as another book which told another story and pointed another, much more realistic moral. It goes this way:

The little girl writhed gleefully on her bed of shame to the delight of the nice man.

Later the little girl invited the man to spend the weekend at her plush apartment.

They made love many times.

On the bed.

On the sofa.

On the bearskin rug.

She taught him many wondrous things; many, many wondrous things.

And when the weekend was over, the little girl fed him knockout drops and took away his last hundred dollars and dumped him out in the street.

The moral of the story is that men shouldn't take goodies from little girls because when they do they invariably end up with an empty candy wrapper.

The heroine of the tale is "Kitten," a 13-year-old prostitute whose underage wives prove too much for the hero of "The One Hundred Dollar Misunderstanding." In this novel by Robert Gover, she shows the claws of the sex kitten more clearly than "Lolita" ever did. And, with the purrs of other shapely underage felines being heard more and more in movie theatres across the nation, Gover's "Kitten" serves, admittedly in somewhat exaggerated fashion, to point up the threat of all sex kittens.

THE TERM "SEX KITTEN" was first coined by French movie director Roger Vadim to help publicize Brigitte Bardot. At 16 years old, BB was a bona fide "Lolita" when Vadim wed her—although the symbol of "Lolita" would not appear for a few years to come. It wouldn't have mattered if it had, for the French are much more realistic in these matters and have long taken it for granted that the younger the shapely femme, the more fatale she's likely to be.

At fifteen, Sue Lyon created the image of "Lolita," the kind of little girl many a big man would like to buy candy for.

At sixteen, Brigitte Bardot became the original "sex-kitten," a provocative creature with the appeal of a child and the promise of a woman.

Just how fatale, was something that even Vadim couldn't have guessed. Working with the raw Bardot material in as much of the raw as the censors would allow—which was considerable—he set about creating the "sex kitten" image with every play he could think up. He held press conferences in bed with BB au naturel stretching her lush curves suggestively beneath the thinnest of sheets. He had still photographs taken of her undraped body from every angle and saw to it that they received wide distribution. And when he got her before the movie camera, he wracked his brain to concoct revealing outfits and sexy situations for her to undulate through.

The first "sex kitten" proved pure catnip to the boxoffice Toms. Then one day she became a sex tigress and Vadim lost the kitten. It happened this way.

Vadim was directing a scene for "And God Created Woman." It featured BB in the buff romping on the sheets with actor Jean-Louis Trintignant. As the scene ended they were to clinch violently, passionately—and revealingly.

Everything went as planned until Vadim yelled "Cut!"

Nothing happened.

"Cut!" he yelled again.

His wife's naked charms nestled securely in her co-actor's arms as though cast immovably in bronze.

"Cut!" Vadim yelled a third time.

This time they moved—but not the way any husband would be apt to appreciate.

"That's enough for today," Vadim told his crew philosophically. He followed them out, leaving Brigitte and Jean-Louis to write their own finis to the scene. That night BB left Vadim and they never again fived together as man and sex kitten.

Thus Vadim learned that once a sex kitten is unleashed, she's not likely to be caged again. It's in the very nature of the pretty (Continued on next page) little beast. This nature, and its effect on mature men, bears examination.

FEMINIST SIMONE DE BEAUVOIR pegged it right when, in an article for Esquire, she defined BB's appeal as that of the "girl-child." She further pointed out that the "girl-child's" appeal was particularly strong in the U.S. where all the stress of advertising and entertainment and magazine stories is on youth. If man after man of mature years could score with BB in her films, then why shouldn't the average American male hope for such a nymph to spark up his middle years? In exchange for youth and vitality, he might tell himself, he could give her experience, sophistication, and all the other by-products of his maturity.

Hollywood was quick to appreciate the nature of the "sex-kitten" appeal to men anxious to possess a love-object to which they might feel superior. But the moguls were still looking for suitable nubile nymphs when an actor who had long been a bane in their assets beat them to the punch in his personal life. It was to be expected, for the actor was Errol Flynn, and this wasn't the first time he'd shown a mania for nymphs.

The first time had been back in 1942 when two teensters blew the whistle on him and proved that sex kittens have claws by hauling him into court on a charge of statutory rape. He beat the rape rap, but nine years later a French "Lolita," aged 15, charged him with once again having been delinquent in his handling of her juvenile charms. He escaped her claws too, but only to anticipate the film "Lolita" by taking on 15-year-old Beverly Aadland as a traveling companion.

In a biography of Beverly, "The Big Love," her mother, Florence Aadland, assures readers that "my baby was a virgin the day she met Errol Flynn." That, according to Mrs. Aadland, was a state that was quickly altered. But before shedding any tears over this kitty's lost innocence, lend an ear to this incident recorded by Mrs. Aadland:

"A very learned man, an authority on Eastern religions . . . closed his eyes and passed his hand back and forth just above Beverly's bright, blonde curls. He said 'I think men are going to kill over this girl. I have the feeling in my heart that she has the scent of musk on her.'"

WELL, MOST SEX KITTENS DO.

And just how right he was is a matter of record. One night, shortly after Flynn's death, a man assaulted Beverly at pistol point, forced her to submit to him and then blew out his brains. Such is the potent appeal of the sex kitten.

It also should be noted that Beverly had been with Flynn when he was struck down by a fatal heart attack in Vancouver, B.C. Flynn, surely a man among men and a lover to be envied, might just have mused, had he the time before his death, upon the strain to a mature man of keeping up with the erotic impulses of a young girl. Many another man has found that teenage love is best left to the teens.

However, such logic melts away in the face of nymphet appeal. And such concerns were certainly far from the minds of Hollywood's bigwigs when they launched what was to turn into an avalanche of pulchritudinous puberty upon the movie-going public. "Lolita" led the way, with 15-year-old Sue Lyon in the title role.

Compared to the flock of "Lolitas" who followed in her wake, Sue's real-life kitten capers have been mild. The sum total of the scandal which might be laid at the tyro siren's door is found in a dance. But when the dance was over, her partner's fiancé ruled out the "Wedding March" in favor of "It's All Over Now."

The incident took place at a Hollywood party honoring Sue. Present were actor George Hamilton and starlet Susan Kohner who were due to tie the knot in a few days time. Hamilton asked the Lyon cub to dance and she accepted. Miss Kohner stood on the sidelines and watched. There are mixed versions of just exactly what occurred during the rhythmic romp, but when the music stopped Hamilton kissed Sue's hand—"fervently," or "politely" depending on who's telling it. In any case, shortly thereafter the Kohner cutie pronounced herself and George kaput.

A DANCE AND SOME BRIEFLY

A necked knuckles may not seem like much cause to break an engagement, but in the short time since sex kittens have appeared on the scene, the potency of their innocence has split many a twosome. The ten-year marriage of Tony Curtis and Janet Leigh, for instance, busted up when 17-year-old Christine Kaufmann, Tony's co-star in the upcoming "Monsieur Cognac," began making the scene with him off the screen as well as on. Like many a nymphet-struck older man, Tony went overboard, allowing Christine to reshape his taste in music and literature, sending her flowers daily, and even overcoming his fear of flying to follow her to Europe.

A pause here to reflect on the idea that it is the older, sophisticated male who influences the young, inexperienced girl. That may be his idea, but in actuality, it's the May maid who more often vampishly revamps her September suitor. Perhaps Man grows weary with the years, or perhaps the sixteen set is just naturally stronger-willed, but the upshot is usually the same: he finds maturity no defense against the budding woman's whim of iron.

Nobody demonstrates this precocious whim so graphically as Tuesday Weld. In words and actions she personifies the powerful lure of the underage undulator for the mature male. Her latest conquest is 44-year-old John Ireland and in discussing him, she also pinpointed the reverse of the sex kitten syndrome as follows: "You can learn more from older men. Young men just want to sit around and tell you about their sex frustrations."

If the statement sounds cynical beyond her years, consider the following facts about the Tuesday child: At the age of five she had her first cocktail, a Daquiri. When she was ten she smoked her first cigarette. And when she was sixteen, already dubbed "Baby Sex" by her co-workers, she told an interviewer that "I like having men in love with me." Well, why not? Accord-

LEE LANE

Port and party, Lee Lane has been pretty much up in the air ever since she shook the dust of backwoods Arkansas off her bare feet and headed for the bright lights of Hollywood. After growing up on a lonely farm, everything is an exciting new discovery for Lee—the sea shore, drive-in movies, fancy restaurants, and fellows who make a fuss over her.

Now that Lee's on the loose, she wants to go everywhere and do everything to make up for lost time. She likes to shake people up by doing the unusual (like shucking her clothes in an airliner) and boasts that she'll try anything once. Still a hillbilly at heart, she doesn't care about a guy's intellect or book learning as long as he's dark and handsome and wants to go places and do things.

THE "BLACK KEY" SCANDALS OF SEX-MAD MUNICH

LIEUT. JAMES M. BURTON

Editor's Note: First Lieutenant James M. Burton has recently returned from duty in Germany. Lt. Burton was one of the key witnesses at the sensational "Black Key" trial in Munich—the first of a series of sex and scandals that uncovered the truth by lurking behind the scenes of Upper Bavaria. This is the first full account published in this country of the glacial debauchery and violence that swirls beneath the placid surface of this great German industrial city.

I STARED IN HORROR at the bloodstained tent that lay on the floor of the table in front of me.

"Yes," I greeted my voice to myself. "Yes, that's Lisa Michels—or what's left of her!"

The uniformed police officer at my side stepped forward and drew the white sheet over the girl. Now only the contours of her lush young body could be seen beneath the covering. But all I could think of were the ghastly wounds I had seen a moment before—the wide, swollen welts that crisscrossed her slender back; the hideous, deeply-etched scratches that had completely disfigured the delicate lines and planes of her face and the huge bruises that covered her generous breasts.

The officer motioned me through a door into his office. Walking behind the desk, he reached into the middle drawer and took something out.

"We found this in her hand," he said grimly, holding the object up. "Perhaps you've seen it before."

I looked at the black wrought-iron key that lay in the palm of my hand. It felt ice-cold.

Slowly I looked up at the German police officer. "Yes," I answered quietly, "I certainly have seen it before."

I MET 19-YEAR-OLD LISA MICHELS at the Lentz house in Munich. Several weeks at Southern Air Force Base had heard that Mardi Gras time in the nearby city was just one long "open house," so we decided to take a look for ourselves.

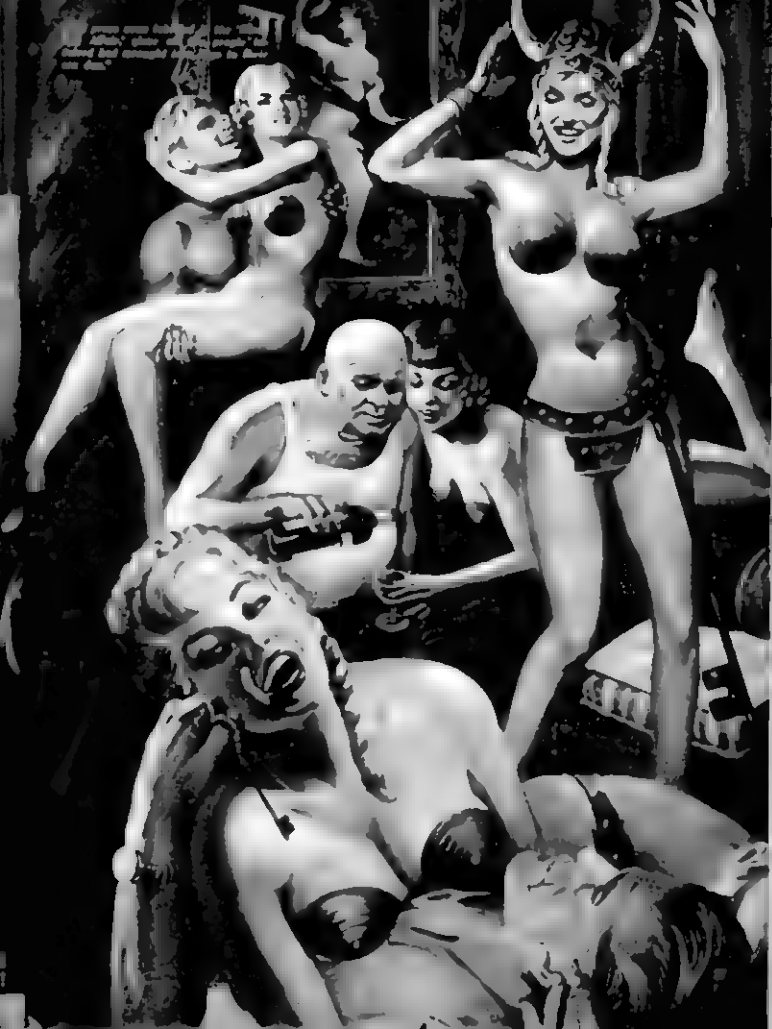

It turned out to be pretty close to the truth and I came across Lisa on my first evening in town.

walked into the huge university hall that was the scene of that night's masquerade party. The blonde girl's full breasts and softly molded hips were draped in the diaphanous folds of a slave-girl costume, but the flashing look in her big blue eyes was anything but timid.

At Mardi Gras time, all formality is dropped. I walked right over and introduced myself.

"I'm an art student," she explained, as we walked over to the bar for a drink. She linked her slender arm through mine, and her smile was warm and inviting. I could feel her sensual heat as her soft body pressed close to me. We made our way across the crowded floor.

It turned out that Lisa was a native of Munich. When she mentioned that her widowed mother had a house out in the suburb of Schwabing, I got a better picture of my new companion.

Schwabing is a pretty exclusive place, and nobody—but nobody—lives out there unless they're pretty well heeled. Usually, they are also high up in Munich social circles, too. That explained Lisa's expensive-made masquerade costume, the deceptively simple-looking jewelry she wore and the high-powered white sportscar she drove.

It did not, however, explain the wild, hungry look that occasionally flashed over her delicately-boned face when she looked at me.

She drove me back to my hotel just as dawn was breaking, and we arranged to meet for lunch later in the day. I leaned across the car seat to kiss her goodnight.

Her lips parted, moist and inviting, as I drew near. Then, with a swift movement, she pressed her body close to me and ground her mouth against mine. Her hot tongue probed feverishly as her long-fingered hands moved searchingly over my body.

Just as suddenly, she drew away, the feral sensuality disappearing from her face the minute she sat up straight again.

"Goodnight, liebchen," she murmured as she smoothed her hair. "See you at lunchtime."

The white sportscar roared off into the cold light of early dawn. I went into the hotel and up to my room. I wanted some sleep.

PUNCTUALLY AT NOON, Lisa appeared through the door of the hotel dining room. She looked fresh and lovely, a fur coat thrown over her shoulders.

We sat down and ordered a drink.

"Tonight," she smiled, accepting the cigaret I offered her, "tonight my mother is giving a special sort of Mardi Gras party. I told her all about you, and she said I could invite you. You will come, I hope?"

"That's very charming of your mother," I answered, taken aback by the unexpected invitation. "But won't it upset her arrangements—you know, an extra guest."

A strange look crossed Lisa's face.

"No," she murmured, "for this kind of party, it won't matter at all."

We spent the rest of the day together, sightseeing all over the old historical city. When night fell, we joined in the Mardi Gras swing again, and by the time midnight rolled around, both of us were in rare shape.

"We'd better get going," exclaimed my blonde companion, checking the time with a passing waiter at the low-lit jazz joint we had landed on. "It's just after midnight—and we don't want to miss any of the fun at home!"

Once again, the flash of almost bestial carnality transformed Lisa's face. But the moment passed almost at once. I paid the check and we walked out to her car.

Lisa handled both her liquor and the sportscar with practiced control, but even so, the drive to her home was a pretty wild twenty minutes. We drew up in front of an opulent mansion and, somewhat hazily, I realized my guess had been right. This was big money.

"They're all downstairs already," giggled the young girl, an almost hysterical edge to her voice. "Come on."

She took my hand and led me through the big wrought-iron gates, along the side of the huge house and up to a small side door. Reaching up to a small niche in the wall, she drew out a black key, the same key I was to identify several days later—under very different circumstances.

THE DOOR CREAKED OPEN, and I was led down a narrow flight of stairs. The same key opened the door at the bottom of the staircase—and I walked into the cesspool center of Munich's debauched high-living society.

The low-lit room was filled with men and women in various stages of undress. Over on a red velvet sofa I could see a couple making love in frenzied abandon, while a slender young man, his flaccid, white body completely naked, ran his effeminate hands over the firmly-muscled body of the man involved.

Two other men, their sagging flesh and creased, wrinkled skins proclaiming their advanced age and vice-filled pasts, grunted and wheezed in a far corner. One of them held a high-heeled shoe in his left hand; other shoes lay scattered on the floor around them.

A voluptuous brunette, clad only in the flimsiest of lace panties, was leaning over the back of an arm chair, her rich, full breasts heavy against the silken upholstery. Her body writhed in febrile heat as she ground her ample hips against the chair back. The tall, dark-haired man standing beside her tossed down a drink as Lisa and I entered, grabbed his curvaceous companion by the shoulders, and threw her down among the tumbled silk-on pillows that lay scattered on the floor. Then he sank down next to her.

The whole place was a roiling, seething mass of unleashed lust and carnal depravity. I turned to Lisa.

"What the hell..." but I stopped when I saw the look on her face.

All traces of her young, fresh beauty were gone as she dragged me down on the nearest pillows and made her voracious sexuality blatantly clear. She rubbed her lush body against me as her hands scrambled feverishly at my clothing. Moaning, she burrowed her face against my chest, her murmured words a stream of throaty, husky-voiced passion.

I pushed her away from me and sat up.

"You've got me wrong, baby," I rasped, shrugging my jacket back into place. "I don't play sex-circus games for public viewing!"

Her eyes widened in disbelief. "But liebchen," she urged, her hands reaching out and caressing my face, "feel me—I want you, so much!" Then her voice turned sharp. "Or would you prefer someone else in here? We could..."

BUT I'D HAD ENOUGH. Sure, I think sex is great, and I had been real interested in my hot little blonde. But I don't like being pushed into things—I'd rather lead. And I like my love-making private. I scrambled to my feet.

"Where are you going?" Lisa's voice rose above the muttered grunts of lust that filled the room.

"Home," I said shortly. "I'm sorry, Lisa, but that's the way it is."

With a wild shriek she leapt up and threw her arms around me. She shouted something in German, and two half-naked men left the women they had been pawing and walked swiftly over to us.

"Was ist los—what's going on?" demanded the taller of the two. I didn't like his tone of voice.

"None of your business," I answered curtly. "Lisa, tell these clowns to keep out."

I didn't understand what Lisa said to them, but she obviously wasn't playing on my side of the game. The tall one made a grab for me—so I figured I'd better get smart and move quickly.

Side-stepping out of his reach, I tripped him as he moved forward. As he stumbled, the other one moved in, but a sharp punch in his soft stomach slowed him down.

"I stared at the lustful display of her exquisitely shaped body."

My clenched fist smashed against his jaw, and he quit bothering me.

The tall one lunged again, but he stopped being so eager to tangle after my raised knee connected with his groin. As he folded, I kicked him aside. Lisa's eyes were filled with fury.

"You pig!" Her voice was strident with uncontrollable anger. "You Amerikanischer kinder—you ruin everything!"

THERE WAS NO SENSE in staying there arguing. All I wanted was to get the hell out. Lisa made no move to stop me, and the last I saw of her that night as I closed the door behind me, she was leaning over the two downed joy-boys. I could just imagine where that budding friendship was going to lead—or so I thought...

By the time I got back into Munich and my hotel, I figured I might as well head back to the Base. Somehow, Munich had become pretty distasteful.

Two days later, I was called in by the OD. A German police officer was with him. There'd been a murder, I was told—would I be so kind as to see whether I could identify the body? The Staatspolizei had reason to believe I might know the deceased.

Half an hour later, I stood in front of the battered body of Lisa Michels. The moment they handed me the black key, I sat down and told them all I knew. They kept asking questions, trying to prod my memory, and they seemed particularly interested in any wooden chests I might have seen in the infamous room.

"I think I did," I said slowly, trying to picture the sex den in detail. "It was along the side wall on the left as one entered. But I think there was another one, on the far side..."

The full significance of the chests, the civic importance of the people involved and the extent of the wanton carnality in Munich's fashionable circles came out in lurid detail at the subsequent trial. The press soon labelled it the "Black Key Affair," since it soon came out that all the people involved in the saturnalias possessed copies of the wrought iron key—the passkey, as it were, to their sex den.

Lisa Michels' body had been found in one of the heavy wooden chests, inadequately covered with leaves and branches in the pine-woods near Schwabing. By the time the trial got underway, all evidence pointed to a drug-maddened sex orgy that had lasted for over fifty hours and culminated in the girl's murder.

MORE SHOCKING STILL was the fact that the main suspects were Lisa's own mother and one of her many lovers. Both of them turned out to be sadistically-inclined perverts and long-time drug addicts.

Evidence at the trial included the testimony of Kapitan Gustav Mürgen, Chief Investigations-officer in the Munich police headquarters.

"I have never, in thirty years as an investigating officer, come across as vicious a case as this," he said, addressing the court. "When we searched the sex den at the Michels' house, we found over two hundred pornographic devices used in sexual perversions. These items ranged from the 'peeping chests' the voyeur's specialty—in which people would lie hidden, peering out at the orgy through cleverly disguised peepholes, to frilled corsets with metal ribs—the delight

"Do you have any proof for that attempted bribery charge, Meegan?"

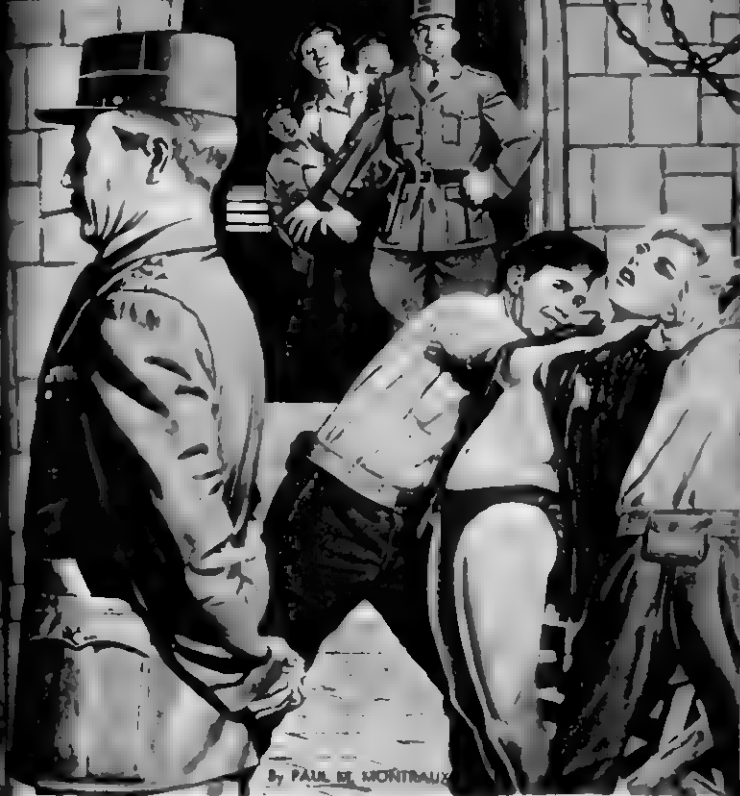

"She says the butler did it—but I checked, sir—they don't have a butler!"

HELLE WINGSOE

We don't expect you to pay close attention with Helle in view, but for future reference, she's named after the Norse goddess "Hela" the queen of the lower regions and daughter of Loki, the god of mischief. In Scandinavian, that means she's a troublemaker; in plain English, a beller.

Judging by that impish smile and the devilish gleam in her eye, we're willing to believe that Nellie more than lives up to her name. But according to her, all she wants to do is settle down with the right guy and raise a little Nellie.

THE RICHEST TREASURE

53 MILLION DOLL

IN THE STRAITS OF KOREA

Editor's Note: Although primarily a literary scholar and cryptologist, J. Mortimer Calway has had a lifelong interest in oceanology. He has condensed the facts assembled here from his forthcoming book, "Mysteries of the Deep."

THE TIME WAS the morning of May 28, 1905. The place was a narrow body of water between Japan and Korea known as the Straits of Korea.

On that fateful morning, a Russian fleet of battle-ships, cruisers, and destroyers glided through the mist rising from the turbulent sea. These battle wagons were the pride of Czar Nicholas II of Russia's fleet. Although nobody outside the Russian Imperial High Council knew it at the time, one of those ships carried in her strong room gold coins to the value of 20,000,000 pounds Sterling—the equivalent in American money of between 50 and 60 million dollars. They money had a specific purpose—the rebuilding of the Russian Far East fleet for the desperate struggle in the war that was being fought with Japan.

On that morning, the Japanese Imperial fleet appeared suddenly out of the mists in the Straits of Korea. The two opposing fleets joined battle at close quarters. Big naval guns roared and sent their huge projectiles screaming thousands of yards to macerate living flesh and steel into an amalgam of death and agony.

The Russian fleet was no match for the expert Japanese gunners. Battleships and cruisers were holed time after time, their magazines exploding as shells struck home. Heavy, dense clouds hung over the Russian ships, a black pall of death. Great cruisers slid beneath the waves, with men, like insects, sliding and throwing themselves from the decks into the seas. Several of the smaller Japanese ships left the battle entirely and devoted themselves to picking up the thousands of helpless men being swept out to sea in the powerful currents in the Korean Straits.

And in the middle of the gigantic naval battle that would settle the destinies of two powerful nations for twenty years, a strange thing happened. One of the Russian battle cruisers, one of the best-equipped and the fastest for her time, with a speed of better than 18 knots, slipped away from the raging naval battle and streaked northward, in the direction of her home port and safety.

TWO JAPANESE DESTROYERS disengaged themselves from the bloody naval slaughter in the Straits of Korea. With a full head of steam they set out after the fleeing Russian cruiser and swiftly closed the gap that separated them from the warship that so desperately did not want to become engaged in battle—although of all the Russian ships engaged, it was one of the most powerful and best-equipped for wreaking damage on the enemy Japanese fleet.

In the Tsushima Straits, between the islands of Kyushu and Tsushima, the Japanese destroyers closed within killing range of the Russian cruiser. Both Japanese destroyers fired a pattern of torpedoes. Two of the sleek black fish struck home, slashing into the hull of the Russian cruiser, opening her at the water line.

The Russian cruiser came to a dead stop in the water. She was afire below decks. The Japanese destroyers closed in on the dying Russian ship, and put out small boats to pick up the survivors in the sea. Other boats carried boarding parties of marines.

The Japanese marines boarded the enemy cruiser. They herded her crew towards the rail, and over the side, in the waiting rescue boats. And then they began a systematic search of the ship, in quest of her papers and code books.

At the third deck down, the navigation officer of the Russian cruiser, and a garrison of Russian sailors stood at all the hatchways, bayonets fixed to their rifles, prepared to die before they would let the Japanese officers and marines pass. The Jap officers were momentarily stymied. They could not understand this bizarre attitude. The ship was sinking. Why were this Russian officer and these Russian sailors prepared to die with her? Were they madmen? What could the Russians hope to gain now by putting up a futile battle below decks of a sinking warship?

THE JAP OFFICER argued with the Russian navigation officer in halting Russian. The Russian was adamant. His orders were that the Japanese were to go no further. The Japs hesitated for a few tense moments. They could feel the ship dying in her buckling plates under their feet. Finally they shrugged their shoulders. What difference could it make? If the Russians were mad enough to want to sacrifice themselves along with their ship, then let them.

The Japanese boarding parties backed off. Not a shot was fired below decks. They took their men and the surviving Russians off the cruiser, and then watched her go down from their small boats as they stood off at a safe distance. The big ship slowly settled into the sea—and then disappeared completely as the sea swallowed her stacks with one last great gulp.

Unknown to any of the Japanese at the time, the Russian battle cruiser took a fortune of between fifty and sixty million dollars in gold with her down to the bottom of the Tsushima Straits. Her navigation officer had fulfilled his final order. He had prevented the enemy from obtaining this fortune in gold and using it against Russia in the war then being waged between the two emerging giants for domination of the Far East . . .

This is the strange story of the Russian battle cruiser, the Admiral Nakhimoff, which took a king's ransom in gold in its steel hull down 300 feet to the bottom of the Tsushima Straits. This ship is described as a light battle cruiser. She was launched in 1887. Her original specifications put her at 333 feet long; she was armored with steel plate that was approximately five inches thick; and she displaced 7782 tons. In 1899, she was put into drydock for re-fitting. She was given new engines and new armament. Her displacement was increased to 8000 tons, and she now had a speed of better than 18 knots.

1904 found the Admiral

BLOOD ORGY FOR THE SWASTIKA

BY CHIEF GUNNERSMATE WILLARD JOHNSON as told to Patrick Needham

State Chief gunner's mate Will Johnson is perhaps the man in Naval history who, single-handed, and without aid, is credited with the sinking of a enemy submarine. He was the one able to accomplish this feat was fantastic. The

ON JANUARY 18, 1942, the stocky captain of the Nazi submarine U-17 sliced open a brown envelope containing secret orders. As his pigboat stealthily cruised up the Gulf Stream between the Bahamas and the coast of Florida, Captain Hugo von Schwerflingen learned that he had been ordered to enter the continental waters of the United States.

Von Schwerflingen's pale blue eyes averted as he continued to read the secret document. What the Nazi high command wanted of him was more than even he, Germany's most daring submarine commander, felt he could deliver.

"You are ordered," he read, "to take the U-17 into the Port of Miami. You will have two objectives in the raid. One, to sink all shipping sighted, and two, to harass the civilian population by shelling the houses along Biscayne Bay. You will terminate your mission by ramming the cause-way between Miami and Miami Beach, and blowing up the ship in this position. You will give your crew's life and your ship, if you must, heroically to the fatherland. Heil Hitler."

Von Schwerflingen carefully burned the orders. Then, after he consulted his charts, he left his tiny cabin for the command station. "Up periscope," he yelled. "Change course four degrees west. Emergency procedures in effect."

He pressed his forehead into the periscope cradle, and pivoted the housing. A small craft—it looked like a diesel-driven, 30-foot pleasure boat—came into view. It was early dawn, and it was difficult for him to distinguish it there was anyone on deck. Suddenly, von Schwerflingen had an idea. "Action stations!" he roared. "Prepare to surface!"

IT WAS NO WONDER THAT Captain von Schwerflingen saw no one on the deck of the cabin cruiser. The two people aboard were in the cabin, enjoying each other in the balmy, romantic climate of the semitropics. The "captain" of the cabin cruiser, which he had rented in Miami, was a chief gunner's mate, Willard Johnson, whose U.S. Navy destroyer had been bombed out from under him in the Pacific the day after Pearl Harbor. He was home on convalescent leave. His "mate" of the occasion was Darlene Foley, a specialty dancer in a Miami Beach nightclub.

Darlene was a doll. She had just been graduated from the chorus line to a strip act when Johnson saw her from a front row table. She was still a little shy and uncertain about the whole routine, which lent the act a special charm, but at the same time Darlene displayed an intuitive knowledge about what men liked about a woman. Of course, she had the goods for it. Johnson liked what he saw when she still had her clothes on, and he liked it even better when they were off, after she had shed them hesitatingly, still bashful before the yelling audience.

He invited Darlene to his table after she returned from the dressing room after her act. She didn't want to come at first, but guys like Johnson with fruit salad on the chest were still rare in those early days of the war, and the club manager insisted. So she sat down, and they became friends and a couple of nights later they got to be a lot closer than friends, and Johnson suggested that they go off by themselves. He didn't like the idea of his sweetheart, however temporary, stripping in public while he was waiting for her to get through the act.

WILLARD JOHNSON HAD THREE weeks of leave and $1500, enough to rent a cruiser and take it to Nannau for a private vacation. Darlene, a city girl, just loved the idea. She'd never been out to sea before. So Johnson rented the boat, stocked it with provisions and sailed it out of the Port of Miami. They were just going to cruise around for a while and forget all about the war.

Will had just left Darlene, who was now putting on white shorts and halter which showed off her young stripper's figure to its best advantage. As he stepped out the cabin door, he saw the German U-Boat break from the swell 30 feet to starboard. He froze, with his mouth half open in stunned surprise. This, he had never expected.

oullaged by the cruiser and shielded by the night. A German crew would man the cruiser Johnson would be in the sub's conning tower with von Schwerfingen, and he would answer if they were hailed and challenged.

There was nothing Will Johnson could do but agree—and hope that there was some way he could foul up the German's plan. His own fate and that of Darlene did not matter to him now that he knew the Nazi captain's plan. Grumblingly, he pretended to cooperate. They untied him from the bunk, and took him to the conning tower.

SHORTLY AFTER MIDNIGHT, THE sub was approaching the shore south of Miami when, from port, Will Johnson heard the unmistakable sound of a fast, diesel-driven ship. Von Schwerfingen pushed his Lager between Will's ribs, and shouted into the speaking tube: "Bringen sie das Fraulein herast! Bring the girl up here."

A couple of sailors pushed Darlene up through the hatch. They handled her roughly and with lascivious smiles, letting their hands slide along her thighs as she mounted the steps, fondling her when they grabbed and held her.

"Tie her to the conning tower," von Schwerfingen ordered.

Darlene screamed when they loosed the ropes around her writhing body. The mate who supervised the operation slapped her roughly. "Maul halten!" he yelled. "Shut your mouth! Or I'll do something that really hurts." Threateningly, he held out a thick metal rod used on German submarines to apply leverage to the screws on the deck hatch covers.

"Now listen to me carefully," the Nazi captain told Will. "My orders are to get into the Port of Miami. If there is trouble with any ship we meet, I shall submerge this submarine and the girl will drown. It is up to you to bluff the captain of any American vessel approaching us. You understand? We are not playing games now. The fun is over."

THE STEEL-GRAY SHIP CAME closer, and in the darkness Will slowly began to recognize the outline of a U.S. subchaser. Von Schwerfingen handed Johnson his megaphone, and hissed: "You better think of something quick or else!" And he motioned with his left hand as if he were cutting his throat.

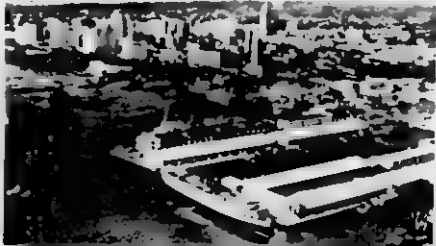

Johnson took the megaphone. He had made up his mind. There was nothing to lose. He knew that he and Darlene had had it anyway.

"Open fire," von Schwerfingen screamed hoarsely at the men on the forward machine gun. Bullets hammered across the water, dragging tracers flashed toward the search light. The deck gun on the sub chaser lashed out with a red tongue of flame, and the submarine rocked as the shell exploded in the water between its conning tower and the cabin cruiser. The next shell blew the pleasure cruiser out of the water. Chunks of wood and scraps of bodies somersaulted in the ray of the search light.

"German submarines," he yelled through the mouth piece. "Gun it out of the water!" and he slammed the heavy megaphone down on the captain's pistol. The gun went off. A warring pain stabbed through Will's hip. His legs crumpled, and he felt the liquid bog of blood running down his leg. He slumped onto the deck, behind the protective breast plate.

The Nazi U-boat commander was determined to carry out his orders to destroy the coastline of Miami.

FOREST OF NAKED THRILLS

"You have been a great deal of trouble, but I really do not mind. I have some interesting plans for you, Jim."

"I could see the girl's eyelids start to flutter as she gradually woke up. The Baron waited until she was fully alert and then pointed at me. 'This is a would-be rescuer sent by your father. It will be a source of great amusement for me to watch you make love to him.'"

It was too much for the girl. She leaped at him, clawing at his eyes. Wilhelm caught her arms in the same hold that Karl had me in. The Baron raised his hand and slapped it across her chest.

The girl tried to fight back her tears, but the steady rain of blows across those full breasts were too much for her. She cried out for him to stop. Finally he did, looking happy and satisfied.

He ordered Karl to march me into the other room and take my clothes off. The girl sat crying and holding her bosom as von Oecht stared at her, his tongue wetting his lips. "I want to watch her as she waits for her lover," he uttered.

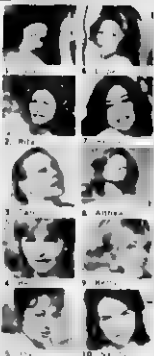

IN THE NEXT ROOM, I took off my jacket and shirt slowly. I had to do something and do it soon. The big man knew what I was thinking. "Hurry up," he said, in a deep, guttural voice.

I reached down as if to unbuckle my belt—then, without warning, I jumped him. It was over in seconds. I fainted with my knee and, as he instinctively backed away, I brought my fist into his Adam's apple.

He was a giant of a man, but it didn't do him any good. His face turned blue from lack of air. He opened his mouth to scream, but his vocal cords had been paralyzed by my blow and he couldn't get a sound out. He crumpled to the floor clanking at his throat. I kicked him in the jaw when he was down and, when his eyes blinked and went blank, I kicked him, again.

Outside, they must have thought that the big man was putting me through my paces. "Are you ready?" the Baron asked.

"Ja," I answered, trying to imitate Karl's voice.

I opened the door a crack to see where Wilhelm was. I could not afford to let him get that gun out of his holster. Then I charged into the room.

I TOOK EVERYONE by surprise. I flung myself at Wilhelm, carrying him to the ground. He tried to get my wrist in a lock, but I shoved an elbow in his belly and cracked my fist in his mouth, leaving a bloody hole where several of his teeth had been.

The Baron picked up the rifle and tried to aim it. But he was reckoning without Louise. Forgetting her own pain, the girl leaped on his shoulders like a wildcat, blinding him and making him drop the gun. He flung her off and went after her with a cry of rage.

I was working on Wilhelm, furiously, trying to finish him off so that I could help the girl. I cracked his skull against the floor until I heard bone crack and felt him go limp. I was sure I had killed him, but I didn't give a damn.

I got to my feet in time to see the Baron grab Louise by the throat. I lunged for him, but before I got there Louise's knee came up once and then again. The Baron screamed in pain and went down, holding his crotch. I slugged him across the jaw to put him out of his misery.

Suddenly, Louise began to tremble and shake. I managed to calm her and we went to the cottage to tell the other girls what had happened.

On the way over I smiled at her and she smiled back. I knew we would have to stay in Germany for several days to explain things to the police. And I felt sure I would enjoy her company. ●●

IS YOUR WIFE A CHEATER?

practically a favorite indoor sport on my set," declared a well-to-do suburban housewife. "I wouldn't say that we've got round heels, but there aren't many wives in my circle who are very hard to get, are included."

Despite such luridly frank statements as these, the overall situation does not appear to be one of wanton, promiscuous sexuality.

The bulk of the respondents who admitted that they had been unfaithful to their husbands stated that they'd had only one two or three extra-marital affairs. Only a minority—about one out of five—told of having four or more extra-marital affairs during the first seven years of their marriage.

However, the significant factor was not the number of the married women's infidelities, but rather it appears to be the swift eagerness with which they embark on their illicit affairs. In this sense, the statement that a goodly number of American housewives are "push-overs" appears to have a considerable degree of validity.

PSYCHOLOGISTS WHO HAVE studied the case histories of the women interviewed during the Psychoanalytical Assistance Foundation survey agree that this phenomenon is quite readily explainable. Careful analysis of the case histories indicates that, in the majority of instances, the psychosexual dynamics motivating infidelity fall into one or another of five distinct and identifiable categories.

In other words, there are five principal reasons why married women drift easily into extra-marital sexual liaisons—why they are "push-overs." All are familiar to psychiatrists and psychologists—and they are, indeed, the five most prevalent sex-problems faced by modern-day married women.

These sex-problems are listed and discussed below in order of their importance as determined by the Psychoanalytical Assistance Foundation survey.

1. Inhibited Aggressions

This is the most frequently noted reason for what one writer has termed the "instant seductibility" of many married women.

As Dr. Edward Podolsky of the New York State University Medical College has pointed out:

"The gratification of 'adequate justified aggression' is essential for mental health. Many neurotic features could be eliminated if people were taught to develop a 'sound self-assertion,' to feel neither guilty about the aggressions nor to suppress them to an unnecessarily great degree."

In children, the compensatory sexual substitute for the suppression or inhibition of aggression is known as "masturbation solace." A child experiencing a disappointment or hurt and unable to express it through normal aggressiveness, often resorts to masturbation. This is especially common in instances when the disappointment or hurt—whether real or imagined—is of a nature to increase the child's need for proofs and demonstrations of love. Masturbation provides a form of outlet for the aggression, a compensation—in short, solace.

Parallel patterns are to be found in adults. For example, a wife may—for whatever reason—feel that she has been hurt, disappointed or slighted by her husband. She feels angry and resentful, but suppresses and represses her natural inclination to express her emotions, to become openly angry and argue or quarrel with her husband. She may be afraid to do so, or she may simply not want to "cause a scene." There are many other reasons which may cause her to suppress her aggressions—but she does suppress them.

The suppression of the aggressions inevitably causes emotional stresses and anxieties. These, in turn, create a strong and urgent need for the gratification of the libido—for the expression of the stifled aggression through sexual outlet.

The wife beset by emotional anxieties, is aroused erotically—and, in fact, may be aroused to a very high state of sexual excitation. But her aggressive feelings against her husband are bottled up inside her. Her repressed anger and re-sentiment against her husband make it impossible for her to obtain the necessary sexual outlet with him.

TRUE, IN WHAT CAN be termed as a near-hysterical search for release of her tensions and satisfaction of her libidinal desires, the wife turns easily to another man. He may have little or no real attraction for her. His only desirable quality may be that he is available at the moment. She enters into an extramarital affair with the man—an affair which is usually of brief duration and which, beyond giving her outlet for her suppressed aggressions, provides her with no emotional satisfaction. Quite to the contrary, it generally causes her to feel depressed and burdened with guilt-feelings afterwards. But the behavior pattern is almost exactly parallel to that of the child who seeks "solace" in masturbation.

In the case of the wife, she does not seek "masturbation solace" but "coital solace," through an adulterous relationship.

2. Penis-Envy

A term broadly applied to describe various forms and manifestations of the inferiority some women feel because they are females. They envy the male (symbolized by the penis) and his dominant position in what the women feel, is primarily a "man's world."

When used in the present context, "penis-envy" denotes the envy and resentment some wives feel because of what they believe to be their husbands' license to engage in extramarital affairs with their secretaries, keep mistresses, patronize call-girls, etc.

Women in this category often become obsessed with the idea that they are handicapped and ill-treated by life because of their "inferiority" as women. To compensate for these feelings and as balm for their envy and resentment, they subconsciously strive to prove they are "every bit as good" as men. Their efforts in these directions are often sexually oriented.

These women will embark on extramarital affairs to prove to themselves that they can do "anything" their husbands can do. The fact that they can achieve the same level of sexual freedom which they rightly or wrongly believe their husbands enjoy and evenness provides them with considerable emotional satisfaction.

3. Facultative Frigidity

A surprisingly large percentage of women are sexually frigid only with certain men. In almost all such cases, the men with whom they are frigid are their husbands. Some authorities claim that no less than 15 percent of all married women fall into this category.

Women suffering from facultative frigidity can achieve orgasm with men other than their husbands with great ease. The psychodynamics behind this paradoxical situation can be traced back to the woman's early childhood and training.

A girl is sometimes taught that any form of sexual activity is a terrible sin. If this concept of the "sinfulness" of sex is deeply engrained in her psyche, her mind and emotions become conditioned to the idea that sex can ONLY be enjoyed under what they have been led to believe are "sinful" circumstances.

There is no "sin" attached to coital relations between husband and wife. The husband has the legal and moral right to indulge in sexual intercourse with his wife. Thus, the element of "sinfulness" is absent in marital relations—and the wife cannot achieve orgasm.

In many cases, a girl engaging in premarital relations will reach a climax easily with a sex-partner she later marries. After the wedding, she can no longer achieve orgasm with him; their relationship is no longer "sinful" to her subconscious way of thinking.

But, women suffering from facultative frigidity encounter no difficulty in achieving orgasm with lovers with whom they have extramarital affairs. The element of "sinfulness" is once again present; the conditions she subconsciously believes to be the prerequisites for sexual gratification are once again present.

Women in this category embark on illicit affairs due to sheer sexual frustration. It is the only way they can obtain satisfactory outlet.

Psychotherapy or psychiatric counselling can almost always solve the problem of facultative frigidity.

4. Poor Sexual Technique On Part of Husband

It has been estimated that as many as one-third of all adult males are unable to consistently maintain erection or withhold ejaculation long enough for their wives to achieve orgasm. Although the estimate is probably somewhat too high, the fact remains that many married women remain unsatisfied during coitus with their husbands for these reasons.

Far too many men are clumsy, perfunctory and selfish in their love-making. They may arouse their wives to a high level of sexual excitement, but fail to satisfy them.

Women whose husbands' sexual techniques are inadequate frequently seek gratification in affairs with other men who are more adept at the art of love.

5. Post-Organic Horror Vacui

A term denoting the fear of the feeling of loneliness and emptiness which some individuals experience after achieving orgasm. The feeling can last for only a few seconds or, as it does in many cases, may persist for days.

Women who experience strong and long-lasting feelings of loneliness and emptiness after achieving orgasm through vaginal intercourse with their husbands sometimes seek to compensate for it by having affairs with other men. In almost all such instances, they limit their sexual activities with their lovers to oral intercourse.

Subconsciously the acts of fellato and cunnilingus are not equated with vaginal coitus. For the woman, fellatio offers adequate subconscious compensations against any feeling of "emptiness."

Most psychiatrists agree that pronounced feelings of post-orgas-tic loneliness and emptiness stem from acute traumatic experience early in life. In most instances the condition can be greatly alleviated or eliminated entirely through psy-choanalysis or psychotherapy.

There are, of course, many other reasons and motivations which cause married women to run not walk into extramarital affairs. But these, according to data provided by the Psychoanalytical Assistance Foundation's survey of 8,457 married women, are the principal reasons, the ones most often encountered by psychiatrists and psychologists.

It is not the psychological researcher's place to moralize.
However—and contrary to the spread popular superstition to the contrary—responsible and ethical psychologists are acutely aware of the fact the clandestine extramar-ital affairs only create and add new problems. They seldom if ever solve any old ones.

A married woman who compulsively sets out to "have an affair" for any reason outside a deep attraction for the man who is to be her sexual partner, is already a woman with deep-seated emotional problems. Her illicit relationship will only intensify the existing problems and add new anxieties and feelings of guilt.

The wife who has any of these five major sex problems which might impel her to become a "pushover" would be well advised to reject adultery as the solution which so frequently seems to be the easiest and most obvious.

It would be far better if she sought the advice of her family physician or of a qualified psychiatrist, psychologist or marriage counselor. The solutions these professional people can provide to the five principal sex problems are far more reliable—and far more likely to be permanent.

And, while it may take a bit longer to get a real solution to the problem—it will be found with far less wear and tear on the individual's mind and emotions and with far less chance of domestic tragedy!

Sex Feeling in Men & Women

Dr. Kelly's sex manual is valuable for three reasons: (1) it covers the entire subject of sex in marriage — male and female reproductive organs; sex impulse in men v. women; masturbation in and out of marriage; pre-coital stimulation; problems of sexually frustrated wives (with case-histories) sex myths; aids to penetration; oral eroticism;

(2) It abounds in important facts generally available only in higher priced books — enlarging the penis to a maximum; the wife's assistance in overcoming semi-impotence; erotic facts of wives all in mating problems caused by over-sized and under-sized husbands; prolonging coitus; etc.

(3) Its original drawings. These include the male and female sex organs, both internal and external and specially-drawn illustrations available in no other manual depicting the correct and incorrect methods of penetration (with and without penile clitoral contact) $3.00

TEEN TEMPTRESSES!!

ing to her mother she'd been dating since she was eleven!

Like Bardot, Tuesday's appeal lies in the combination of childish frankness and an early physical development which resulted in a 36-19-36 figure at an age when some girls are still playing with dolls. But this doll seems bent on playing another kind of game. Or perhaps it was just childish carelessness that recently caused her to answer a knock at her hotel door with the statement to a bug-eyed valet that "I forgot I hadn't worn my pajamas last night." In the time it took her to make the explanation, the valet ogled every uncovered inch of Tuesday's torso.

But it was all a big yawn to Tuesday, who has publicly stated that she's "looking forward to posing for cheesecake pictures. I mean the real nude ones—" No wonder Denny Kaye once characterized her as "fifteen-years-old—going on twenty-seven!"

IN THE SLANG OF ANOTHER generation, Tuesday's still at that age—under eighteen—which Errol Flynn once categorized as "jail bait." He was referring to the fact that in most states of this country when a male over 18 has relations with a female under 18, even with her full and enthusiastic consent, the law says he is guilty of the crime of statutory rape. Living in the spotlight of publicity, chances are that Tuesday will never be involved in the enforcement of such a law. Indeed, although she comes on strong both antically and verbally as far as is known Tuesday may still be as pure and clean as Monday's fresh wash.

The thing is that her blatant flaunting of her charms points up the threat of other, perhaps more immoral sex kittens. For example, a few years back a 17-year-old girl pressed statutory rape charges against an 18-year-old boy in a New York court. Defense counsel proved in court that the girl had been a working prostitute from the age of 14, that she had solicited the boy, willingly had relations with him, and only raised a protest after the Vice Squad busted into the hotel room they were occupying. Nevertheless, the law was clear. The girl was underage, the boy was not. He was sentenced to one to five years in jail!

Sad, but there are the risks a man faces when he gets himself involved with a nymphet. And they are apt to be even greater when her status is amateur, rather than professional. Certainly no girl-child was more of an amateur than the headline-making Cheryl Crane.

A few years back Cheryl allegedly stabbed to death Johnny Stompanato, a notorious character who'd been playing house with her mother, Lana Turner. Just as violent death provided a high point to the sex kitten career of Beverly Aadland, it marked the beginning of the same kind of career for Cheryl.

There were unproven rumors that Stompanato and Cheryl may have had their own housekeeping game going behind Lana's back, but following the scandal, and Cheryl's return from a home for delinquent girls, all was forgiven and forgotten. Cheryl settled down to live the life of a "normal teen-ager" with Mommy and her fifth hubby. Fred May. Soon thereafter, however, the "normal teen-ager" staged an elbow-bending, wild party that got so out of hand it was raided by the police. And then, awhile later, Lana and May split up to the whispered rumor that once again Cheryl had possibly been poaching on Mommy's amorous preserves.

True or not, the fact is that Cheryl has moved out of Lana's house, moved into an apartment she shared with another girl and embarked on a career that found her a full-fledged, even if strictly local, sex kitten. The place she picked for her debut is a sleazy nitty called the "Summit" on Sunset Strip. Here, with two other girls, she does an act which calls for a changeover from bathing suits to diaphanous undies. And when the show is over and the undies have been covered with a dress, Cheryl's often nothing loath to make the scene at some of the wilder Hollywood parties.

Here she is quite popular with the more mature Hollywood playboys who dig her nymphetish appeal. They find that she's not only old beyond her years—but frequently beyond themselves!

That would seem to be a truism which may be applied to all sex kittens, not just Cheryl. If there are elements in her story that sound more like "The Bad Seed," than "Lolita," why then there are the same elements in the characters of many of the sex kittens. As one Hollywood columnist put it, "these little girls are murder!"

We might add that they're particularly murder on mature men. Which leads us to end with a bit of advice: Don't cross your Brighties until you come to them—and if you're wiser, don't come to them at all! ☐

A collection of pornographic books and pictures was also found, along with high-heeled boots, chains, whips and knotted ropes. A cabinet filled with opium pills, heroin powder and a variety of aphrodisiacs was also among the court exhibits.

And, most implicating and condemning of all—the full list of the sex group's participants was found in a small black ledger, along with the "fees" they had paid to enter the "exclusive" circle, and their monthly dues. All revenues—and the sums of money involved were staggering—went into the purchasing fund for drugs, devices and aphrodisiacs.

The names involved rocked Munich. Herr Emil Harff, one of the city's top industrialists; Doktor Anton Koeh, laboratory director at the Staat Medizin Gesellschaft; Frau Sigrid Meese, well-known in society circles for her charity fund-raising programs—every single name on the list was that of a prominent, wealthy citizen.

Because I was one of the few "non-members" ever to have seen the sex den in full swing, I was asked to testify at the trial.

"Your testimony will be invaluable," explained Kapitan Mergen, "since you were so obviously not directly involved in the so-called club."

AS THE TRIAL PROCEEDED, and as the "club members" realized the game was literally up—or rather, that their "games" were finished—the horrifying story began to pour out. Bit by bit, the details of what had happened after I left the Michel's house fell into a complete story of depraved, decadent vice.

"Of course we were taking drugs," said one of the more effeminate witnesses. "There is no other way to live. I myself helped Lina give herself some of the injections. She was handling five men for most of the time—obviously she needed a little stimulation."

done of God only knows how many drugs, the party's participants degenerated further and further in their actions as the hours went by. Lisa apparently decided she was "meant" for her mother's lover, and a fight broke out between mother and daughter.

What exactly happened after that was never clearly established, but the last that was seen of Lisa Michalski set the final note that ended in the jury's verdict. Favorable people testified to say that Lisa was dragged forcibly out of the room by her mother and her mother's lover. They had already struck the girl with one of the bullwhips that was later found outside in the garden; but the girl was never seen again until her mangled body was found in the pinewoods.

When witnesses were asked why they had not interfered, their answers always held to the same pattern.

"We do not believe in interfering in our group."

"One sees many strange things in life—why should I have risked tangle in somebody else's problem?"

"Sleep (them)? Of course not—in such his own form of pleasure."

THE TRIAL LASTED for well over a month, rocking Munich's citizens time and again as horror after horror spilled out in the lurid, lugubrious testimony. The jury deliberated for two days, then handed down a verdict of guilty on Frau Michalski and her lover. They were convicted of "manslaughter while under the influence of narcotics," and sentenced to ten years hard labor.

I left Germany shortly after the end of the trial, but I understand that even further scandals have been uncovered since then. It does not surprise me, since Kapitän Murgon was emphatic in his desire to clean up Munich once and for all.

"We cannot continue to close our eyes to the debauchery and perversion that exist around us," he declared. "The sordid truth has been laid by the Black Key Affair. My men and I will work around the clock if necessary, but this must be cleaned up—completely."

And, judging by the reports I've seen in recent newspaper news, Kapitän Murgon and his palinist-friends have been doing exactly that. ●● drove it solidly into my kidney.

The half-blinding wave of pain rolled over me. I felt a rearing in my ears and the room began to spin. I heard a high pitched scream and recognized it as coming from my own throat. I twisted and flopped around the floor like a dying fish, writhing and sweating in agony.

The door opened, suddenly. Margot Durant came in followed by her brother, Gerard.

The pain gradually receded and I was able to look at the woman through eyes that were still tearing. I took in her bush curves, the soft fullness of her bust-line, the slender hips. This was the girl I loved; the girl I wanted to marry. And this was the same girl who led me into the spot I was in right now!

Margot's face whitened when she saw my condition. "What did you do to him?" she asked The Bull.

The big man scratched himself and shrugged his massive shoulders. "Nothing much," he said. "He was talking too much and I shut him up."

"One day you'll go too far, Bull," the girl murmured, lowering her eyes to the floor.

GERARD HAD HALF TURNED away. I knew that the only reason he hadn't let The Bull kill me earlier was because of his sister. And if he could get the job done without her knowing who was responsible, he'd finish me off, now. In a way, I couldn't blame him. As long as I was alive—even now with my hands and feet tied together—I was a potential danger to him and his insane scheme.

I forced myself to speak, to try and convince them just how impossible it was. "There have been other attempts on the President's life," I said, finally. "And yet he is still with us. What makes you think that you will succeed?"

"Perhaps we won't," Gerard admitted. "But then someone else will try. And if he fails, there'll be another attempt, and another. . . . Eventually, your fine General de Gaulle will be dead." He smiled a thin-lipped smile of satisfaction. "But this is wrong! It can do no good. . . ."

"There he goes talking, again," The Bull said, stretching himself. "Want me to kick his teeth out, this time? That should stop him up."

Margot choked on her breath, sharply. "No!"

Gerard sighed. "Not now," he said, regretfully. Then he turned to me. "But you'd better keep quiet, Paul. I can't stop The Bull forever, you know." He laughed. "But you don't understand. . . ."

His face twisted suddenly into an ugly mask of rage. "No. It is you who do not understand," he said, spitting the words out at me. "How could you understand? You are no longer one of us! You have decided that. You are a Parisian!"

I SIGHED BACK, DEFLATED. He was right. I was no longer one of them.

I was one of them, once, however. I was born in Algeria, like them and the rest of the gang. I grew up, in fact, in a small house in suburban Oren, just a few blocks from where Gerard and Margot Durant had lived.

All during my childhood and through my teens, Gerard was my closest friend and his younger sister became my best girl. I took Margot to her first dance, gave her her first kiss under the palm trees and everybody expected us to be married once I left the university and found a job.

The troubles were increasing in Algeria, but that didn't worry us. We had faith in the paratroopers and the Foreign Legion. We knew Algeria would stay French.

Then, my whole world broke apart. Margot fell in love with another man and married him.

It was a whirlwind affair as they had eloped almost before knew what was happening.

Afterwards, she wrote me a note and tried to get me to meet her new husband, but I could not bear to look at her again. Gerard was sympathetic, but he was planning to be married, himself, and had little time for me.

I decided to leave for France and make a new life for myself there.

That was about a year and a

How to get into

One of today's hottest money-making fields —servicing 2-way radios!

More than 3 million two-way transmitters have skyrocketed the demand for service men and field, system, and R&D engineers. Top-notch licensed experts can earn $12,000 a year or more. You can be your own boss, build your own company. And you don't need a college education to break in.

HOW WOULD YOU LIKE to start collecting your share of the big money being made in electronics today? To start earning $5 to $7 an hour...$200 to $300 a week...$10,000 to $15,000 a year?

Your best bet today, especially if you don't have a college education, is probably in the field of two-way radio.

Two-way radio is booming. Today there are more than five million two-way transmitters for police cars, fire trucks, taxis, planes, etc. and Citizen's Band uses and the number is growing at the rate of 80,000 new transmitters per month.

This exciting boom presents a solid gold opportunity for trained two-way radio service experts. Many of them are earning $3,000 to $10,000 a year more than the average radio TV repair man.

Why You'll Earn Top Pay

One reason is that the U.S. Government doesn't permit anyone to service two-way radio systems unless he is licensed by the FCC (Federal Communications Commission). And there simply aren't enough licensed electronics experts to go around.

Another reason two-way radio men earn so much more than radio-TV service men is that they are needed more often and more desperately. A two-way radio user must keep their transmitters operating at all times, and must have them checked at regular intervals by licensed personnel to meet FCC requirements.

This means that the licensed experts can "write their own ticket" when it comes to earnings. Some work by the hour and usually charge at least $5.00 per hour, $7.50 on evenings and Sundays, plus travel expenses. Others charge each customer a monthly retainer fee, such as $20 a month for a base station and $7.50 for each mobile station. A survey showed that one man can easily maintain at least 15 base stations and 85 mobiles. This would add up to at least $12,000 a year.

Be Your Own Boss

There are other advantages too. You can become your own boss—work by yourself or gradually build your own fully staffed service company. Instead of being chained to a workbench machine or desk, you'll move around, see lots of action, rub shoulders with important police and fire officials and business executives who depend on two-way radio for their daily operations.

How to Get Started

How do you break into the ranks of the big-money earners in two-way radio? This is probably the best way:

He's going high. Before he got his CIE training and FCC License, Ed Delaney's only professional skill was as a commercial pilot engaged in crop dusting. Today he has his own two-way radio company with seven full-time employees. I am much better off financially and really enjoy my work. In fact, "I found my electronics business thorough and easy to understand. The CIE course was the best investment I ever made."

1. Without quitting your present job, learn enough about electronics fundamentals to pass the Government FCC Exam and get your FCC License.
2. Then get a job in a two-way radio service shop and learn the ropes of the business. All CIE students can use our free employability survey.
3. As soon as you've earned a reputation as an expert, there are several ways you can go. You can move out and start signing up and servicing your own customers. You might become a franchised service representative of a big manufacturer and then start getting into two-way radio sales, where one sales contract might net you $5,000. Or you may be invited to move up into a high-prestige salary job with one of the major manufacturers.

The first step—mastering the fundamentals of electronics in your spare time and getting an FCC License—can be easier than you think.

Cleveland Institute of Electronics has been successfully teaching electronics by mail for over thirty years. Right at home in your spare time, you learn electronics step by step. Our AUTO-PROGRAMMER® lessons and coaching by expert instructors make everything clear and easy even for men who thought they were "poor learners." You'll learn not only the fundamentals that apply to all electronic design and servicing but also the specific procedure for installing, troubleshooting, and maintaining two-way mobile equipment.

Get Your FCC License... or Your Money Back!

By the time you've finished your CIE course, you'll be able to pass the FCC License Exam with ease. Better than most out of ten CIE trained men pass the FCC Exam, even though ten out of three non-CIE men fail. This sterling record of achievement makes possible our famous FCC Warranty: you'll be able to pass the FCC Exam upon completion of your course or your tuition will be refunded in full.

"What are you going to do?"
"Tell the authorities," I said flatly.
"No."

I was half way through the door, but something in her voice made me stop and turn. Margot was pointing a small but deadly pistol at me.

"Don't make me do it," she said, her eyes troubled but firm. "I love you as much as any woman has ever loved a man. And for all I know, you may be right in what you say. But I swear to you, I will pull this trigger if you try to leave this room."

MY SHOULDERS SAGGED. I knew damn well she meant what she said. She ordered me to walk in front of her down to the basement and I didn't argue.

There, Gerard thanked his sister and turned me over to The Bull. He seemed to be in the gang for the sheer love of violence and brutality. Gerard and the others were motivated by hatred and vengeance, but to The Bull these motives were secondary. He was there because he loved the taste of blood.

And I was at his mercy. Only a man who hated me stood between me and destruction at The Bull's hands.

The other three members came into the room. "We must see you at once," one of them told Gerard. "There's been a change in de Gaulle's plans."

Gerard nodded and left with them. I was alone with Margot and The Bull.

"Please believe me," the girl said. "I had to do what I did for Gerard. He could not stand being arrested again. But I'm sorry. . . . Her voice broke. "I did not want you hurt."

"What do you worry about him for?" The Bull asked, sneeringly. "After what they did to your brother."

Without any warning whatsoever, he came over and deliberately kicked me in the crotch!

I screamed and writhed in the most unbearable agony I had ever known. My stomach twisted and I began retching up bile on the cold cellar floor.

Margot screamed and beat her fists futilely against The Bull's massive body. He merely laughed and flung her to one side. He drew back his foot again and I shuddered in anticipation. Then there was a quiet thud as Margot raised her gun and brought the barrel down hard on the back of his head. The Bull grunted and collapsed.

In brief seconds, Margot was kneeling beside me, cutting my bonds with a small knife. She sobbed and told me that I was right; that the plan was an evil one which reduced her brother to associating with men like The Bull. "I'm sorry," she cried, bitterly.

With her help I made it to my feet. I was throbbing with pain and every step was an agony, but I knew we had to get out of there before the others returned. "Let's go," I hissed.

"All right."

Suddenly there was a noise behind us. When we turned around The Bull was standing there, shaking his head, grrogly.

Margot tried to bring the little gun up, but The Bull was able to knock it out of her hand. She scrambled for it, but he caught her shoulders and threw her across to the other side of the room.

THEN HE TURNED to finish me off. I was still feeling shaky and about as solid as a bag of mush as he raised his ham-like fists. I knew that if he could land one blow, I'd be done for. Instinctively, I kicked with all my strength against his kneecap.

I felt the cartilage crumble and The Bull's leg twisted out from under him. He shrieked and grabbed the injured joint, holding on to it and sobbing out curses. I put him out of his misery with a kick to the point of his jaw.

I turned to the girl, but The Bull had held us up too long a time. Gerard and the others were staring at us.

Gerard's gun was level with my belly. "Get away from my sister," he said.

I did what I was told.

"I've had all the trouble I'm going to have with you, Montmarx," he said. "Bull was a valuable man. Take a last look at life—traitor!"

"Don't . . . !" Margot cried in a tortured voice.

"Keep out of this," her brother snapped. "I've listened to you long enough."

Gerard's fingers whitened as he started to squeeze the trigger. There was a sharp explosion. Gerard's face wore a look of complete surprise as he dropped the gun and slumped to the floor.

MARGOT'S FACE LOOKED white and sick as she held the still smoking gun. I ran over and took the gun from her hand while she ran to her brother's side. I held it steady on them as I phoned the police and an ambulance.

Today, The Bull and the three other male members of the gang are safe in prison, but Gerard never got to stand trial. He recovered from the gunshot wound, but his mind broke down completely. He is now in a mental institution about forty miles from Paris.

As for Margot and me—because of the girl's help the authorities paroled her in my custody. However, it often seems more as if I was paroled to her. We were married three months ago! ●●

Sex And The Teenage Girl

The little-known but shockingly TRUE story of the immoral and perverted sex practices of today's delinquent teenager. Documented facts from official records, including actual testimony which tells in detail of the all-out sex acts and perversions that have only been whispered about or never before disclosed to the general public. This book tears aside the curtain of secrecy and bares the naked, brutal facts, revealing every form of sexual perversion practiced by and upon the teenage girl.

How teenage girls are lured into making pornographic films • How and where these films are made • The official inside story of how nude model schools operate • How teenage girls make $5,000 a year having illegitimate babies to be sold for profit • The secret testimony on Marilyn Monroe's nude playing card photos previously banned from the mails • The actual case histories, from police files, of 15 and 16 year old amateur prostitutes in Miami, Baltimore, Los Angeles, New York, Chicago, St. Louis, and Washington, D.C. • How teenagers obtain the most obscene pornography, such as stag films, french postcards, photographs of "nude sex parties" books dealing with every form of sex degeneracy • Teenage girls' unnatural practices with animals • The little-known stories of wild sex orgies in college dormitories • How young girls are drawn to lesbianism • How narcotics are used to induce young girls to greater and more perverted sex efforts • Every variety of male and female sex relations—normal, abnormal, lesbian, homosexual • That police of Washington, D.C., Hollywood, California, Poughkeepsie, Baltimore, Providence, Chicago, New York, have discovered (based on seized pornographic films) • All this and much, much more in this startling expose, revealing the little-known world of teenage debauchery with its concentration on finding new and different sex thrills and of those who trade on the young, the innocent, and the unwary. All true—documented with actual testimony and case histories. This book is destined to become a collector's item.

Nakhimov at the Libau naval base in the Baltic Sea after an honorable service with the Russian Far East fleet. On May 13 of that year, an event of vital importance in the Nakhimov's future history took place. The Czar, Nicholas II, negotiated a loan for his country of 800,000,000 francs, equivalent to 32,000,000 pounds Sterling, with the Banque de Paris group, an organization of international banking houses associated with the economies of various European governments. 20,000,000 pounds of this great loan was designated for use in purchasing supplies, equipment, and armament for the Russian Far East fleet in the war with Japan.

On October 12, 1904, that 20,000,000 pounds Sterling, equivalent to between $50 and $60 million, was loaded aboard the Admiral Nakhimov for transport to the Far East. The Admiral Nakhimov left the Libau naval base and joined the Russian fleet then assembling for the move to Pacific waters. Her mission was not to engage in battle, but to safely transport the fortune in her hold to its destination, and under no circumstances, to allow it to fall into the hands of the enemy. For the move to the Far East, the fortune had been converted into British gold sovereigns.

DOCUMENTATION FOR THE authenticity and existence of this tremendous fortune in gold 300 feet below the surface of the waters of the Tsushima Straits in the hold of the Admiral Nakhimov can be found in numerous legitimate and unimpeachable sources. The New York World Telegram & Sun published the following report on page 207 of its The World Almanac for 1950: "1903—May 26. Russian battle cruiser, Admiral Nakhimov, sunk in fight with Japan's fleet in Bay of Tsushima; loss of life unknown. The vessel carried $53,000,000 in gold."

In "The Japan Russia War," by Sidney Tyler, it is stated on page 554 that "Russia suffered a loss of seventy-five million dollars in gold" when one of its ships went down as the result of enemy action in the Bay of Tsushima in May of 1905.

On page 615 of "The War in the Far East," by Charles A Court Repington, it is stated that on May 13, 1904, a Russian loan of 800,000,000 francs (32,000,000 pounds Sterling) was issued by the Banque de Paris group.

As early as 1938, a salvage operation headed by Akirushi Isumi, president of the Japanese Shintishi Deep Diving Research Institute of Japan, was formed to go after the approximately $53 million in the hold of the Admiral Nakhimov. So far this organization has been unsuccessful. Known as the Pacific Far East Salvage Company, Inc. this organization issued a prospectus in 1955, soliciting additional investors in its salvage operation. Much of the information that follows is based on material in this prospectus, offered to this writer when he was invited to participate in the venture. The material substantiates the existence of this vast hoard of gold under 300 feet of water in the Straits of Tsushima.

JUST AS Nazi Germany ignored the warnings of its spy, known as Cicero, in the British Embassy at Constantinople, of the date and place selected by the Allies for their invasion of Europe in Normandy—so did the Imperial Army and Navy of Japan ignore the information supplied by their own intelligence experts during the Russo-Japanese War of 1905. General Fukuda Masatomo of the Japanese Army Intelligence Bureau, reported that his agency had obtained firm intelligence that a Russian ship had sailed from Libau, loaded with gold coins valued at 20 million pounds Sterling. This intelligence was ignored by the Jap high command.

The fact that the Admiral Nakhimov avoided combat in the battle of Tsushima Straits, although she was one of the best-equipped and most heavily armored in the Russian fleet, and attempted to use her speed of 18 knots to escape the engagement is a matter of historical record. Her strange flight from battle confirms the fact of her mission, and the existence of the precious cargo in her hold.

We have already told the story of the chase after the Russian cruiser, and its sinking by two Jap destroyers with two torpedo hits on May 28, 1905. In addition, we have described the determination of the Russian navigation officer and his troops to deny access to the lower third deck to the boarding party of Japanese marines. Not well known, however, is the fact that twenty-nine of the Russian cruiser's crew were landed by their Jap rescuers on the Mugi no-shore of Tsushima Island. These men had in their possession English gold coins, recorded by their captors as being equivalent to 125,000 yen in value.

ON TSUSHIMA ISLAND, the Russians were befriended by the Jap head-man of the local village. Russian officers and sailors rewarded him with the information that their ship had gone down with a huge cargo of gold coins similar to the ones they possessed. They said he would be well rewarded if he retrieved them coins from their ship.

The officer in command of the Admiral Nakhimov when she went down, one Captain Ruitoff, was subsequently repatriated to his native Russia. In one of his reports to the Russian high command, the following statements were found: "I sent the things, which I was bringing to you, with the 'Adm Nakhimov' in 50 fathoms of sea, and they can never be utilized by the enemy."

The National Archives of Japan contain a telegram sent on October 25, 1904, by Hayashi Gonsuke, Minister Plenipotentiary to France, to the Japanese government. In that telegram is contained the following summary of intelligence material gathered by Gonsuke's agents: "When the Baltic Fleet sailed eastward, it was decided that the funds for the rearmament of the Russian Far East Fleet would be carried with it. The Russian government floated loans at Berlin and Paris. At Paris she gathered 700,000,000 francs and at Berlin she gathered 800,000,000 marks. This money was exchanged for British gold coins which have already been loaded aboard ship."

The Pacific Far East Salvage Company, Inc., began salvage operations on the Admiral Nakhimov in 1938. Methods for working at the 300 foot depth with relatively unsophisticated equipment were developed, but all operations were halted by World War II. Work on the ship was begun again in August of 1953.

IN THE SUMMER of 1954, Japanese skin divers began the actual work of salvage. Extensive work by hard-hat divers is prohibited at the present time because of the cost of equipment and personnel—and the company's funds are limited at the present time.

The Jap skin divers are held to four minutes of actual working time at the 300 foot depth—of which point they must begin the slow ascent to the surface. Nevertheless, they have been able to make remarkable progress.

The Japanese divers report that the Nachinnoff lies just over 300 feet below the surface of the waters of the strait. She is resting on the bottom at an angle of about 50 degrees to starboard on a generally even longitudinal keel in open water where there are fast and powerful currents.

The Japanese have already cut away the first and second decks of the vessel. They are presently concentrating on cutting away the third deck in the after part of the vessel. They found that the first two decks were of fairly light construction and made of iron that was reasonably easy to cut. The third deck, however, has presented a particularly severe problem. It is made of semi-armored steel which is almost impossible to cut at the 300-foot depth.

The Jap skin divers do most of their blasting with small charges of explosives. Use of large charges for blasting is ruled out because of the age of the wreck and the danger of blowing the fortune in gold through the wall of the ship and into the open sea.

RECENTLY A PASSAGE was blown to within four feet of the bow of the after gun turret. The Jap divers are pinning their hopes on the possibility that the rich prize is located in the magazine that is situated below this turret.

The Japanese attempt to salvage the $53 million in gold coins is primarily limited by a lack of funds and the corresponding necessity to work with primitive equipment. Hazards that would hamper any salvage company, no matter how well financed include the bad weather in the strait for most of the year and the consequently short working season. In addition, there is the great depth at which the work must be conducted and the strong currents that flow in the strait. Also, the care that must be taken with explosives—in view of the fact that the cruiser is loaded with high-explosive ammunition that might be sympathetically detonated.

So far—for all the obstacles we've mentioned—the rich gold prize has not been snatched out of the Russian cruiser's hold. It is still lying there... and the opportunity to snatch a mountainous fortune from the deep is still present. One way of doing it would be to buy an interest in the Jap operation—with the hope that it will ultimately prove successful. There are two alternatives, both of which ignore the Japanese. One would be a salvage project, on the cheap, organized by a party of American skin-divers. The other, adequately financed, would be a full scale venture, equipped with the latest depth-probing equipment, observation chambers, air lifts, clam grabs, etc. It would take a lot of money, but the gamble would certainly be worth it. It's a matter of putting your money down, taking your pick, and grabbing for the richest prize the sea has had to offer in all of history.

Never Look SHORT Again!

Now You Can Be TALLER Instantly!

By at least 2 full inches with amazing new invisible "LIFTEE" HEIGHT INCREASE PADS

Are you handicapped in your social contacts because of a short appearance... tired of being called short? Now, at last you need not suffer this embarrassment any longer with the aid of "LIFTEE", the new amazing HEIGHT INCREASE PADS. Simply slip these invisible pads in any pair of shoes. Now step into them and add 2 inches in height. THE SAME HEIGHT INCREASE AS EXPENSIVE HEIGHT INCREASING SHOES. No one will suspect that you are wearing them — but what an impressive difference they make! These LIGHTWEIGHT FOAM RUBBER AND CUSHION CORK PADS fit securely without gluing and interchangeable in any shoes. "LIFTEE" is scientifically designed for real walking comfort and an aid to better posture. Worn by thousands of smart men and women in all walks of life. Durable and shock absorbing.

INVITE ROMANCE AND BE ADMIRER AND RESPECTED BY THE OPPOSITE SEX

You shall be admired more by women who always like their men to be taller than themselves. Don't be left out of social life and dates because of short height. The taller man is always more popular, looks better in clothes and is in great demand at parties and dances. Being taller will give you more self-confidence and poise — a key to success and romance. Being taller will produce and cause more admiration and you shall be respected more in every walk of life by both women and men.

EARN MORE MONEY — BEING TALLER HELPS YOU FIND AND QUALIFY FOR THE BEST JOBS

It is well known that making a taller appearance helps you find the best jobs and earn more money in spare time or full time. With your new height comes a gain in self confidence and prestige that is literally priceless when you are seeking a better position. Being taller will help motivate your success. You may assume greater leadership, seek out lucrative opportunities and help put yourself on easy street for the rest of your life.

WHY SPEND MORE ON COSTLY CUSTOM MADE OR BUILT UP SHOES?

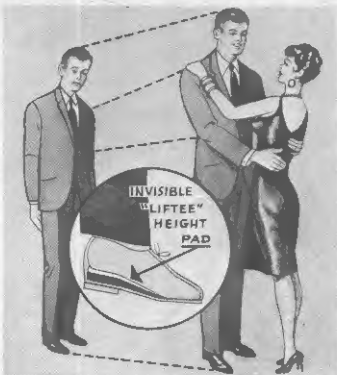

That's why thousands of men in all walks of life are using "Liftee" Height Pads, which are interchangeable in all shoes without gluing, to secretly build up their height. The cost is only a fraction of what you pay a manufacturer who charges up to $50 or more per pair of built up shoes; even though you accomplish the same HEIGHT INCREASE results. The price of $1.98 to be 2 inches taller and the added poise and confidence that comes from wearing "Liftee" Height Pads is certainly a low price for you to pay for increasing your height.
